Why does anything matter? Why do we pursue anything? What does living teach us? Living in the suburbs has a way of making you ask what the point of it all is.

We should not play God by attempting to know and solve everything. What does it mean to be one? Why become one? Why do people keep their secrets? Reasons for that are insecurity, fear of being weak, and the need for mutual agreement. Why does this happen? What is so scary about the possibility that the other side may be right? The fear is of becoming a burden, of temporary friendship, of losing, of not being part of a collective.

Agreeing with a person brings in some new duties. It leads you to having the same view. There can be more disagreement and that may actually deepen the relationship. When you share a common space, there are certain things that you are expected to agree on, however, non negotiable boundaries should still exist. Otherwise, it may lead to resenting or inequality.

What i feel is that It seems almost all the time that the world is against us whenever we have to agree. As a case in point, any clause imposed on students by IIITD is likely to cause them to loathe IIITD even more. We, as friends, experience both the good and the bad times together.

Relationships get damaged when individuals are solely focused on winning, or when they put others in such positions where winning matters. Respecting the Relationship, putting it above the other factors is the key.

When the group challenges the authority, it becomes difficult for the latter to justify its position. Otherwise, authorities think that everyone is taking care of himself/herself/itself without problems. At the end of the day, we are the ones who rule ourselves.

What i feel is; Loneliness is a social problem; what we need are more gatherings and not chatbots.
